

Duo game to pen 'Hunter'

Scribes set up supernatural thriller

Oct. 21, 2004
By Ian Mohr

NEW YORK -- Scribes David Schneider and Drew Daywalt ("Stark Raving Mad") have come aboard to pen the bigscreen adaptation of the videogame title "Hunter: The Reckoning" for director Uwe Boll and producer Shawn Williamson.

Boll and Williamson are coming off another videogame adaptation, "BloodRayne," starring Ben Kingsley, Kristanna Loken, Michelle Rodriguez, Michael Madsen and Meatloaf.

"Hunter" is skedded to start pre-production in February in British Columbia.

Story follows a group of men and women who become aware of supernatural monsters preying on humanity and are imbued with special abilities to combat them.

Source material rolled out through the Vivendi Universal label in 2002.

Boll previously helmed the videogame adaptations "House of the Dead" and the upcoming "Alone in the Dark."