Brightlight Pictures Collaborates With Gold Circle Films to Produce "White Noise 2: The Light"
Shooting will begin in early 2006 on the sequel to the box office success "White Noise"

(Vancouver, BC) - Brightlight Pictures today announces its latest collaboration with Gold Circle Films on "White Noise 2: The Light", a sequel to the supernatural thriller and box office success "White Noise" that was shot in Vancouver in 2004. "White Noise 2: The Light" is a feature film scheduled to shoot in the Greater Vancouver area in early 2006. Patrick Lussier is directing (Wes Craven's "Dracula 2000, II and III" and editor of "Scream") the script as written by Matt Venne. Lead actors are currently in negotiation. Roque Pictures has acquired U.S. distribution rights with Mandate Pictures handling foreign distribution.

The original feature film "White Noise," starred Michael Keaton ("Beetlejuice", "Batman", "Jack Frost"), and was produced by Gold Circle Films and Brightlight Pictures. The White Noise North American box office sales saw a total gross of $100 million (Canadian Funds).

In "White Noise 2: The Light", the story follows a man who is brought back to life after his family is murdered. After his own personal near death experience, he undergoes a transformation that allows him to see people who are on the verge of death. Trying to save their lives, he realizes that a price has to be paid for trying to change the natural order of things.

"'White Noise' is an incredible success story for the Canadian film industry," says Brightlight Pictures producer and principal Shawn Williamson, "Grossing $100 million (Canadian Funds) along with a day and date release in both Canada and the U.S., we see 'White Noise 2: The Light' further telling the story that Canada has the talent and the ability to continue to produce successful major motion pictures for worldwide audiences."
